This only means it downloads a small amount of data from the active server as it connects, usually only a few KB at a time. Online content, movies, music, etc. from various sources can create a large download. If it is a movie or a game, it is probably because of the extra content or the movie sizes. Generally, the more MB or GB a file size is, the longer it takes to download the file. When you use your computer with an Internet connection, you use a program called a web browser to surf the web and download files. Your web browser interacts with an online server, and the server sends data to your computer. The data sent to your computer is a webpage; the webpage contains text and images. The webpage that is sent to your computer, with the text and images, is known as a web page or a document. A document usually has a unique URL, called a web address. For example, www.creativesky.com/Word/WordDoc.html is a webpage that has the text "Word" on the left, and on the right side there are two images called "Word" and "World." The webpage contains links to other web pages. If the website you are visiting has a web address with file extensions like .htm, .html, .asp, .php, .pl, .jsp, .js, .txt, .asc, .csv, .exe or .zip, that means the website allows you to save the file. Microsoft Word Open File When you use the default web browser on your computer, the web browser automatically downloads the page to your computer. Your web browser may also have more advanced features. For example, it may allow you to save a webpage as a file, called a bookmark. You can also tell your web browser to send a web address to
