Energy alone can cause neither the aging of the heart nor the formation of atherosclerosis and arteriosclerosis. However, it can cause obesity and diabetes mellitus. Moreover, energy substitution can influence mental health and physical and mental health. This is because energy can be supplied to the body through food, movement, and the metabolism of the body. When food and water are ingested, they are received by the mouth, stomach, and small intestine and are digested by enzymes and put into the blood. When the blood circulates through the vessels of the body, some of the blood is introduced into the liver to produce plasma. Some of the components of the blood are distributed to the cells to be exchanged for nutrition and waste products, and the components of the blood are again distributed to the tissues, muscles, bones, and skin. Before the blood of the body circulates through the vessels of the body, the blood is pressed through the blood vessel walls. This is due to the contractile function of the heart. Accordingly, the heart is a pump that supplies blood to the blood vessels to meet the needs of the living body. Generally, every heartbeat emits a stream of blood. Since the stream of blood is emitted in a condition where the blood pressure of the heart is high, the blood pressure is decreased when the stream of blood is emitted. However, since the stream of blood is emitted in a condition where the blood pressure is decreased, the stream of blood is received through blood vessel walls, i.e., the blood vessels are contracted. A systolic period and a diastolic period are set in a heartbeat. When the blood pressure of the heart is a high pressure for a short period in the systolic period, the blood pressure of the heart is decreased for a short period in the diastolic period. The heart contracts and relaxes by receiving a large amount of the blood. The heart contracts a short period and relaxes for a long period when it receives blood. The diameter of the blood vessel walls is increased for a short period when the blood vessel walls receive the blood. The heart relaxes and contracts for a short period when a large amount of the blood is supplied to the heart. The blood vessel walls contracts and relaxes for a long period when a small amount of the blood is supplied to the heart. The blood vessel walls contract and relax for a long period when the blood vessel walls receive a medium amount of the blood.
