A senior Russian lawmaker has warned of a new Cold War, calling out the U.S. and Europe for what he called their hypocrisy in imposing sanctions on Moscow while arming Ukraine. “A new Cold War has begun, and the temptation is to refuse to admit this,” said Viktor Ozerov, the chairman of the Defense and Security Committee at Russia’s lower chamber of parliament. “This danger includes ‘hybrid’ war, the violation of sovereignty, the intimidation of the other, and the pressure on the political decisions of nations,” he said in a statement published by the Interfax news agency. “Although the reaction to the imposition of sanctions is fierce, most countries fail to understand that such measures have been implemented because of their own actions,” he added. “America and the European Union have once again proved the hypocrisy of those who accuse the Russian authorities of protecting the interests of Russian citizens,” he said. “The West is strengthening the eastern frontiers of NATO and is openly seizing control of our Crimea, whose population is wholly against this,” he said. “Russia is aware of all this, but we won’t fight for our interests in this way.” The State Duma, which met Thursday, is debating a bill toughening Russia’s response to the situation in eastern Ukraine where the government is fighting a separatist rebellion. Last week the Russian Foreign Ministry said the latest round of sanctions was “shameful” and “backfire” because most of the U.S. and European Union’s sanctions are targeted at individuals and companies, not states. Russia has refused to recognize the new government in Kiev that took power last month following street protests that led to the ouster of Viktor Yanukovich.
