Q: Parse the "Qty" portion of a mysql_fetch_assoc() I have some code that loops through a mysql query and outputs the results in a table. I need to then take the qty number from a row, and put that into a variable so that I can use the variable as a price on a formula. I'm not having much luck with parsing the information; I'm trying to use something like $total = $price * $qty; The way I'm getting the qty numbers, which is working correctly, is from: echo $row['sub_total']; So I'm trying to put that into a variable and then use that variable as a price. A: Since the sub_total column is integer, there is no need for converting it to string. Just use $row['sub_total']. $total = $row['sub_total'] * $qty; If the column is of type float, you need to use floats for calculations. [Adrenal involvement in the course of beta-thalassemia major (author's transl)]. The authors present the clinical features of 20 cases of adrenal insufficiency in patients suffering from beta-thalassemia. A clinical study of the symptoms, signs, the hormonal profile and the therapeutic procedures with particular attention to the adrenal histology are discussed. The results indicate that in patients with beta-thalassemia a long-term corticotherapy should be administered in case of a severe adrenal insufficiency.
