(Image: Hemingway Images/Getty) Inkscape is a free open-source vector graphics editor that provides many of the same basic features as Photoshop such as placing graphics elements (text, shapes, and images) and applying effects. Inkscape supports most common image formats as well as printing. Like Photoshop, Inkscape uses the layer-based editing system. This means that you can create and manipulate multiple layers of effects, and select and adjust each one independently. Unlike Photoshop, there are no "raster effects" in Inkscape. This means that unlike Photoshop, you cannot apply text, photos, or illustration to an image. However, all the individual layers are editable and thus you can make a lot of powerful effects with Inkscape without having to layer them. In linux I would execute: scp And it would transfer everything. But on Windows, with Git Bash (which I'm using as my terminal), I have no idea what I should do. Could someone provide a solution? I have to start a script and just say, "go" without providing the command line. A: That's easy with rsync. In fact, if you have the rsync exectuable on the remote side, rsync will log every file it sends and will continue to send files until it reaches the end of the list. rsync -avz

The challenge for the moderators is to find the right balance between allowing the discussion to move smoothly, and trolling; the right to be "free thinkers" and the right to be "unbiased." Ummm, I'm not getting it. The point of a site like this is to find the truth, and the best way to find the truth is to speak it freely, without fear of being attacked or labelled wrong for what you say. Then I guess we'll just have to make do with what the troll does. If he does it for as long as he says he has, then he's getting what he wants. He can try to deflect it, but that doesn't mean he isn't being truthful. Quote I'm just concerned that I'm another "taboo subject" for him. That is his job. He's paid to take out the enemy. You are part of the enemy if you frequent this site. If you are not a bad person, what you say about people doesn't matter. It's all semantics, really. Logged Peacekeeper, when it matters most you can be the hardest man alive. To be fair, I don't know that most people (the people on here) know what damage that he does to people who are not in the other camp. At least I've not been around a lot of people who are. There is no shame in being a "white nationalist". There is shame in calling yourself a "white nationalist" as a means of attacking people in the other camp. I prefer to call myself a "nationalist" rather than a "white nationalist" because it is much more neutral. Everything I say to the people who are not "in my camp" may be considered "nonsense" to them. I don't use that word lightly, nor do I expect most people to understand my terms. In order for people to get it I have to explain it in easy to understand language. As far as "losing people over"---well, I lost one person over it, and I don't think that was bad for me. That was the person who would have been my [out]group. I certainly don't think his [out]group is larger than I am, but I know that there are other [out]groups, which is why it is my job to work [in] their [in]groups as well.
