I'm trying to make a game where you throw a ball at a goal and I'm trying to work out how long before the ball hits the goal to make it happen. I started with this query: SELECT T_time + 0.5 AS first_time, T_time AS seconds_to_go, ABS(T_time) AS distance_to_go FROM (SELECT UNIX_TIMESTAMP(T_time) AS T_time FROM t_distance) Dt; Now I'm trying to do a UNION to allow me to pick out the first time and then a UNION to get the seconds to go and then finally a UNION to get the distance to go and then finally pick out the time using an IF statement to where it says first time or second time. I am using this query: SELECT if (first_time = 1, 0, first_time), if (seconds_to_go = 60, 0, seconds_to_go), if (distance_to_go = 180, 0, distance_to_go) FROM (SELECT T_time + 0.5 AS first_time, T_time AS seconds_to_go, ABS(T_time) AS

There are many practical, ethical and aesthetic problems which have been encountered in machining metals, especially titanium alloys and other similar materials. Some of the most common problems which occur during the machining of a metal ingot are illustrated and explained below: 1. First, the material to be machined, i.e. the metal ingot, becomes difficult to machine when it begins to be heated up. This occurs because of the thermal expansion of the metal which the machining operation requires to be carried out. 2. The increased hardness and strength of the material being machined may cause the cutting operation itself to require increased force to accomplish the desired shape or contour of the part being machined. This is due to the fact that the temperature of the part being machined may be increased more than necessary during the operation due to the heat generated at the cutting operation itself. The machining of titanium alloys is particularly problematic due to the fact that the production of titanium alloys results in the generation of alpha or hard titanium alloys, which are particularly difficult to machine by conventional means. This is because the metallic structure of an alpha titanium alloy is so complex that the original shape of the material ingot must be destroyed by a high speed impact in order to permit the machining of this material. The machining of an alpha titanium alloy is achieved by striking the ingot with a hammer to produce a temporary compressive stress within the material during the machining operation. This renders the material in a ductile condition. The ingot is then exposed to a hardening treatment which consolidates the material such that it cannot be worked without machining the ingot. The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for machining titanium alloys which overcomes the deficiencies of the prior art.Milan: Contradictory Washerwoman Milan: Contradictory Washerwoman () is a 1999 Italian drama film directed by Paolo Costellano.
