I am trying to find anyone who has done the 44H on an EME-V101 Model. I am looking for information and ideas of what to do. I am new to EMEs and want to do a couple projects before I even try the metal wings on a second EME model that I want to buy. I also wonder if anyone has the same issue with the canopy frame lines. They all are a bit too long. I have 2 ideas of what I could do to at least keep them from touching. A)Cut all of the lines about an inch down the line (like actual modeling) and b)cut the lines where the frame/wing connects to each other (around the line of the frame where it meets the wing and maybe cut off a little of the wing) I have a KG model with 10 oz stem and stock wheels. I installed the stock wheels and I have not had any problems. The stock wheels have 5.16s. I had trouble with the old wheel set so I just switched to new wheels. I was told on ebay that the new wheels are thicker and should work better. The stock wheels are the old 13.5 mm rubber. I'm guessing some people want to chime in before I have the chance to finish this thread and tl;dr it. I have the whole kit and a bag of new parts. It's sitting in my garage waiting for some new hardware and I'm ready to go. Currently I'm using WTS Wings and Clear RPS 1T Piston Handels. For ground control I like to use my Warbon

Game The new fantasy action RPG Incredible story and visuals Three-dimensional world with detailed environments and battles Rich and deep combat gameplay Unique fantasy RPG style Improved battle animations and battle effectsEffects of ornithine decarboxylase inhibitor difluoromethylornithine on rat endometrial cell proliferation in organ culture: role of polyamines. To evaluate the role of polyamines in the regulation of rat endometrial proliferation, the sensitivity of endometrial cells to ornithine decarboxylase (ODC) inhibition was determined in organ culture. The ODC inhibitor difluoromethylornithine (DFMO) led to an initial, transient proliferative response in rat endometria cultured for 24 hr. The duration of this proliferative stimulus was shortened to approximately 12 hr in the presence of 10 microM DFMO. The enhancement of endometrial cell proliferation in DFMO-treated cultures was inhibited by simultaneous addition of putrescine or spermidine. The turnover of putrescine and spermidine in the endometrial cells was also measured. The putrescine turnover constant was similar in control and DFMO-treated organ cultures. In contrast, the spermidine turnover constant in cultures with DFMO was twice that of controls, showing that the turnover of spermidine was enhanced by the ODC inhibitor. These data support the hypothesis that polyamine metabolism is involved in the regulation of endometrial cell proliferation. However, this regulation may not be specific to one polyamine, but rather a complicated process involving the interrelationship of all polyamines.Beach Sound residents can expect a mega-amplified concert this weekend (01/24/2013) Beach Sound residents can expect a mega-amplified concert this weekend, according to Jarryd Jackal, a manager with Manifesto, the record label overseeing the Soundwave Music Festival, which will feature more than thirty rock bands headlining and dozens of local acts performing.
