"I'm not going anywhere, no," Kerr told ESPN's Stephen A. Smith in a Tuesday interview. "We've got a lot of good players and coaches, so I feel very happy where we are." Kerr's Warriors were knocked out of the postseason on Saturday night, dropping to 3-5 in games decided by eight points or fewer. They hold an 11-1 record in those games since the NBA enacted the so-called "We Are Golden" rule, which requires teams to hand out first-round playoff invitations to regular-season conference champions. The Warriors outscored opponents by a net of nine points in those 11 games and shot better than.500 in seven of those contests. But on a team that enters the 2018-19 season with a roster full of young, talented players, the emergence of two All-Star seasons from Curry and Durant raised the stakes in Golden State's quest for a third NBA championship in four years. "We're going to be fine," Kerr said. "I think our young guys are going to be fine. They've had to handle a lot. I think they've done really well. And frankly, we haven't played as well as we did at the end of the year, but we'll get better and better. I'm always saying this, I'm really excited with this young team." While expressing confidence in the young core, Kerr will be unable to coach the squad for a
