Do not use Photoshop for creating raster-based images. If you want to create a whole page with a photograph, you need to use a different application or Adobe Photoshop for vector-based images. Creating a Page Layout in InDesign With this method, you can create a file that you can go back and edit in Photoshop or Illustrator, or you can go directly into InDesign for a quick look at your page layout. In this walk-through, we demonstrate setting up your page in InDesign CS3. We cover the basics of creating a document, inserting and modifying your images, setting up the page, creating a photo spot, and publishing the document to your web server. 1. Open the `1.indd` or `1.pdf` file that was included in the Chapter 1 archive. You may want to save this file to a different directory to keep all the pages under one roof. 2. Select Edit Layout; a text box appears on the page. Type the following text: • `_The Basics_` 3. Click the Reveal Grid button and then click the Refresh button. 4. Click the box to the right of 6/8 on the left edge of the View/Page Setup dialog box, as shown in Figure 1-17. Figure 1-17: Adjust the number of pages displayed so that you can see how the layout will turn out when you create it. The Value field displays the page number for the current page. You can adjust the page number by clicking the triangles to the right of the Value field. When you click either triangle, the Value field switches to the current page number. 5. In the Page Setup dialog box, shown in Figure 1-18, you can also change the following settings: • Number of Columns: To create a two-column layout, set the number of columns to two. • First Page: If you're creating a two-column layout, you can decide whether the first page of the document will have two columns or one. (If your page layout has a four-columns design, the page break points for the first and second pages may not line up, depending on the size of the images you choose.) When you enter the number of columns, click the First Page button to the right of the Number of Pages field to start the new page. You can also adjust the

Q: Application pool account is changed automatically after server restart I have c# web app in IIS on Windows Server 2008R2 which is hosted on a domain. I'm using Windows authentication with forms and SQL server authentication. Is there any way to keep my application pool account unchanged after server restart? If it is true (I guess it is), how can I make sure this job is done? A: If you are using Windows authentication, the credential (typically IUSR) used by the pool is not related to the account used to authenticate to the server. If you are using SQL Authentication, use that account. If you are using Forms Authentication, you'll need to set things up as I believe they did in this sample. , the key driver of inequality in the United States (Ganguly et al. [@CR18]) and in many other nations (Palma and Tornell [@CR42]). Second, we should recognize that the entire set of available data is not compatible with the hypothesis of midlife mortality convergence. Our analysis suggests that convergence in older life expectancy is driven by late-life mortality decline (Coate et al. [@CR10]). The recent rise of life expectancy in the United States has been driven, by and large, by a reduction in mortality in late-life---the so-called mortality bulge (Liu et al. [@CR34]; Badman et al. [@CR3]). These trends will continue for the foreseeable future. A less homogeneous set of data, therefore, would have prompted us to adopt a more conservative interpretation. Third, our results imply that the cause of convergence is too recent to explain the absence of convergence in the United States today. Although convergence in life expectancy at birth is lower today than it was during the 1950--1980 period, the dramatic reduction in life expectancy among cohorts born between 1980 and 2000 indicates that convergence was more substantial during the past 30 years than during the past 40--70 years. Because of these various reasons, we were reluctant to conclude that convergence is already established at the level of the entire population. Let us take stock. We have shown here that the convergence between the United States and the rest of the world is a reality and has been for decades. We have also shown that convergence in life expectancy at birth has not yet been achieved. All trends seem to point to the fact that convergence will take place

Q: Regex replacement to remove HTML code I'm trying to parse out some HTML from a web page but some of the HTML being returned is formatted with tags and I need to remove the code (casing, quotes, brackets, etc) before parsing the HTML. Sample code: python 2.7.3 (default, Jul 27 2012, 21:43:30) [MSC v.1500 64 bit (AMD64)] on win32 I tried doing this: response = BeautifulSoup(response, 'html.parser') and it works as long as the code is properly closed. Otherwise it just leaves it in the HTML. Am I just looking at this wrong or is there no easy way to do this? A: First of all, you cannot replace the content of an element. You have to find the tag you want to replace in the content, and replace it with the content you want. To find all the code tags, you can use regex: >>> s = 'python 2.7.3 (default, Jul 27 2012, 21:43:30) [MSC v.1500 64 bit (AMD64)] on win32' >>> import re >>> re.sub("\s*(.*)", "", s) 'python 2.7.3 (default, Jul 27 2012, 21:43:30) [MSC v.1500 64 bit (AMD64)] on win32' How do you achieve, maintain, and sustain high performance as a top web app developer? In the last two years, we've had to endure numerous internal development in the form of Drupal evangelism, a flood of negative press about Drupal, a $70 million dollar case, a huge customer acquisition, and an ambitious, beautiful corporate website overhaul, and even more "Drupal for small business" articles. Yet, despite a number of ups and downs and a couple of distractions, we've nevertheless seen the web team consistently win awards and bring in multi-million dollar clients. What has given us the edge in the face of these numerous challenges? Well, for one, we're a tenacious team. As leaders in the Drupal community, we're loyal to our mission and we take ownership
