Neonatal prematurity increases the risk of wheeze and asthma: a Danish population-based cohort study. Childhood asthma is associated with neonatal prematurity and lower respiratory tract infection. We examined these in a population-based cohort study in Copenhagen, Denmark. Participants were 24,162 children born in 1993-1994, with data available on birth weight, mode of delivery, delivery date, gestational age, maternal smoking, and maternal respiratory illness within 10 d before delivery. Parental asthma and hay fever were recorded at age 6 yr. The odds ratio (95% confidence interval) of asthma increased with decreasing gestational age, being 3.8 (2.7-5.2) at 6d1f23a050
