While the original settlement in 1997 resolved all pending matters regarding Afro Dutch, a similar lawsuit filed by the company in 1999 against Marcus Garvey Enterprises, Inc., was dismissed in 2001. In the interim, the 2,000-page Afro Dutch settlement deal, which was the biggest settlement ever reached in that city's history, has been a source of litigation. According to the agreement, two companies - Afro Dutch Services and Afro Dutch (a division of Wachovia) - were required to comply with a number of conditions. "In the 15 years since the settlement, Afro Dutch has not pursued a single aspect of its business under the settlement," Richard Landsman, Afro Dutch's former attorney, said. "Afro Dutch has abided by every provision of the agreement." One important provision of the settlement was that the companies were not to transfer funds between Afro Dutch, Afro Dutch Services and Afro Dutch (a division of Wachovia), Landsman explained. "Afro Dutch did not move money back and forth, which allowed Afro Dutch to stay in business," Landsman said. "But the agreement was simply never enforced." According to Landsman, Afro Dutch "did everything the settlement demanded of us." The Sotomayor Law Firm, the plaintiff's attorney in the lawsuit, did not respond to requests for comment. According to the settlement, Afro Dutch "agreed to refrain from engaging in direct communication with former Afro Dutch clients for the purpose of inducing or assisting them to terminate their employment with Afro Dutch
