[3H]MK-801 binding was studied in the developing rat brain (postnatal days 0-75). The specific binding of [3H]MK-801 to cortical membranes was more abundant in pups younger than 5 days old than in adults, and it declined with age. With a membrane preparation enriched in the postsynaptic density fraction, there was no significant increase in [3H]MK-801 binding with age, which was different from [3H]D-aspartate binding, suggesting that the increase in [3H]MK-801 binding seen at the lower concentration levels in vivo was due to postsynaptic changes. The postsynaptic enrichment was used to enhance the binding of [3H]MK-801 in cortical membranes of rats ages 15-21 days old. Under such conditions, binding was not detected in newborns and increased abruptly in the second week of life, with a peak at postnatal day 15. The results suggest 15-21 days old. Under such conditions, binding to excitatory amino acid receptors in the cerebral cortex during the second week of life.
