The present invention relates to a new and distinct cultivar of Hydrangea plant, botanically known as Hydrangea macrophylla, commercially referred to as a mophead-type Hydrangea and hereinafter referred to by the name 'HMCAD11011'. The new Hydrangea plant is a product of a planned breeding program conducted by the Inventor in De Kwakel, The Netherlands. The objective of the breeding program is to create new freely-branching Hydrangea plants with unique and attractive plant habit, attractive and unique coloration and good garden performance. The new Hydrangea plant originated from a cross-pollination made by the Inventor in 2008 in De Kwakel, The Netherlands, of a proprietary selection of Hydrangea macrophylla identified as code number 08-04-20-B, not patented, as the female, or seed, parent with a proprietary selection of Hydrangea macrophylla identified as code number 08-03-11-B, not patented, as the male, or pollen, parent.
