Mouse leukemia virus (MuLV) is a virus that is transmissible by both blood-borne virions and cell-free virus-like particles. MuLVs replicate primarily in the myeloid-lineage cells of infected mice. Because the primary viral gene product is the viral gp70 envelope glycoprotein (gp160), viral replication is presumed to result in the differentiation of infected myeloid cells into mature cells that produce immunodeficiency virus-like particles. Using a molecular approach, we demonstrate that the promoter activity of the long terminal repeat (LTR) of MuLVs (but not the sub-genomic LTRs of MLVs or alpharetroviruses) is regulated by transcriptional control mechanisms, including the presence of nuclear factors that interact with multiple, intragenic regions of the promoter.For decades, special counsel Robert Mueller has been investigating whether the Trump campaign colluded with Moscow during the 2016 presidential election. Now, the House Judiciary Committee says Mueller's findings have "confirmed" President Trump committed a crime after all — and House Democrats plan to hold him accountable for his alleged misconduct. The investigation, which Mueller was appointed to lead in May 2017, concluded two months ago that it was not in the position to clear the president of collusion. Mueller also went so far as to say in his report that Trump did not offer any "evidence that anyone associated with the campaign conspired or coordinated with the Russian government in its election interference activities." But many Democrats now want to see what the former FBI director found regarding obstruction of justice. And that means holding Trump accountable by whatever means necessary. "There's no way to
