The Problem: I start a session every time I am editing a form, so that any form's submitted data is stored in the session. But I notice that when I start a new session, even if I don't edit anything, the values from the previous session are still there. Example: I go to the edit_product page (where I edit the name of a product), I click on save, and I start a new session, but when I go to the update_product.php (which is used to update the product), all the variables from the previous session, are still there. Does anyone know how to fix this problem? A: Actually, you should never use $_SESSION for storing data that you want to keep between pages. You should use $_COOKIE instead. This is because $_SESSION is meant for storing data between pages. To update a session variable, use $_SESSION['my_var'] ='some value'; To read a session variable, use $_SESSION['my_var']; EDIT: And 6d1f23a050
