The positive potential is on the inside of the coin; the negative potential is on the outside of the coin. The Department of State and the various federal agencies that fall under its authority, including the Immigration and Customs Enforcement Department, do not have the powers to detain criminal aliens found outside the United States' borders. Therefore, they can only detain or remove aliens who have a criminal conviction. The Crime Act of 1984, however, gives every agency that falls under the jurisdiction of the department the power to arrest and detain aliens regardless of citizenship or status if they are found to be unlawfully present in the United States. The National Counterterrorism Center is part of the Department of Homeland Security, and is charged with identifying and tracking terrorists and terrorist organizations around the world. Its missions include providing information to U.S. policymakers on foreign terrorists, supporting the work of U.S. intelligence agencies, and assessing the threat to the United States posed by international terrorism.
