This method can be applied for all components of sequential PM schemes and any subset thereof. Appendix E. List of Figures {#s0105} ===== ! [Fig. E1. Dependence of PM performance on target ratio and prior information. For every three rows, the left panels (a--d) show the theoretical results and the right panels (e--h) the empirically measured results of the PM scheme of [bb0050]. For a comprehensive explanation of the curves in the plots, see [Fig. E3]{#f0020}{ref-type="fig"}. Each panel contains 11 rows. In each row the x-axis represents the ratio between the number of messages to be sent to the number of sensors, ranging between 1:10 and 1:1. The top six panels (a--f) show the results for the PM with no prior information. The bottom five panels (g--l) show the results for the PM with prior information. Curves indicate analytical results (red) and simulated experimental results (gray). The dashed line in panel (e) represents the theoretical PM scheme ([@ 79a2804d6b
